ALL WORK AT FIRE STATION

Scrubbing Windows and Mending Furnish Employment.

Fire-fighting, as an exclusive profession, is not arduous in Columbia. Often a month or six weeks will pass without a fire worthy of attention.

But for all that, no one idles at Columbia's fire station. Today, had you passed that way, you would have seen the outer brick wall decorated with quilting from the firemen's beds. Two men were scrubbing the patched work and applying soap.

"Our departmental laundry," they would advise; "—portable and efficient."

The interior of the station is kept spotless, and sanitation seems to have become a fad. Seldom is anyone seen idle. Tires are mended, mechanical contrivances are tried, and the practice of the station's musicians is neglected.
